Journal Policy

The UU Journal of Humanities, Law and Social Sciences serves as a pivotal platform for scholars and researchers to share their insights and contribute to the discourse within these fields. Recognizing the importance of quality and integrity in academic publishing, the journal has established a comprehensive publication policy aimed at guiding authors through the submission and review process. This article outlines the key aspects of the publication policy, ensuring that potential contributors are well-informed regarding the requirements and procedures for article publication.

Humanities, law and social science have a very complex and intertwined relationship. UU Journal of Humanities, Law and Social Science sought to establish a cross-disciplinary dialogue about the importance of understanding human behavior with context from multiple approaches. Potential contributors should ensure that their manuscripts align with the scope of the journal, focusing on contemporary debates, theoretical frameworks, empirical research, or critical analyses pertinent to these disciplines. The Journal in the changing world of academic publishing, distinguishes itself by empowering a rigorous and accessible framework for the exchange of scholarly work.

Objectives of the Journal

The UU Journal is designed to be a site for humanities, law, and social science researchers, academics and practitioners to contribute their perspectives, research, and reflections. In doing so, we hope to inspire cross-disciplinary conversation, and to encourage a scholarly community that responds to the state of the world as it is right now. The journal strives not only to publish high-quality research but also to ensure that this research is of significance to the wider academic community.

Scope and Focus

The journal publishes in a wide variety of fields within the humanities, law and social sciences. Articles may be historical analysis, theoretical legal studies, sociocultural studies, and/or policymaking, to name only a few topics. A broad scope fosters a varied portfolio of disciplines and perspectives, opening prompt new conversations, avenues, and ideas.

Submission Guidelines

The specific technical submission requirements are shown below to help make the process as efficient as possible while ensuring an equitable evaluation of contributions. Manuscripts should be original, unpublished and in accordance with the journal's style guide, which includes specifications on referencing, structure and length.

Formatting and submission guidelines are critical for ensuring a smooth review process. Authors are required to adhere to specific formatting styles, which include guidelines on font size, citation formats (such as APA, MLA, or Chicago), and overall structure of the manuscript, with less than 5000 words article excluding references. All papers are sent to this email: interarticle2090@gmail.com

Peer Review Process

The health of academic publishing rests on the robustness of the peer-review process. Submissions are scored on originality, methodological soundness, clarity, and contribution to the existing literature. Reviewers offer feedback to authors to aid in ameliorating their work and ensuring the dissemination of the highest-quality research only.

Ethical Considerations

We are devoted to maintaining the highest ethical standards when it comes to research and publishing. All authors are not required to declare potential conflicts of interest, and all research involving human subjects must adhere to ethical guidelines. The journal's policies are designed to prevent plagiarism and other forms of academic misconduct.

Open Access Summary and Periodic Table of Elements

The UU Journal of Humanities, Law and Social Sciences, a quarterly journal, provides a platform for new research. The journal adheres to open access principles, providing readers access to published works without financial barriers.

This policy and publication regulation of the UU Journal of Humanities, Law and Social Sciences expresses our values and principles on academic integrity, inclusivity and excellence. These are the principles we strive to follow so that we can create not just beautiful academic writing but also contribute to the communities we belong to. We invite researchers and scholars to participate in our journal, an important step in their rich area of research.

Article Publication and Processing Fees

To sustain the operational costs associated with the review, editing, and publishing process, the UUB Journal requires authors to pay a publication fee upon acceptance of their manuscripts. These fees contribute to maintaining the journal's standards in peer review and editorial processes and are pivotal to aligning the journal with global publishing practices.

Single author article publication and processing fee is $50, while more than two authors is $70. The fees are paid when article is accepted. This fee encompasses all the necessary edits, formatting, and online dissemination of the article.

Article publication payment can be processed through various methods for ease and convenience, including credit/debit cards and bank transfers. Detailed instructions on how to complete the payment will be provided in the acceptance email.

Refund Policy

Once the acceptance of an article is communicated and payment is done, the publication fee becomes non-refundable. This policy is in place to cover the administrative costs incurred during the initial review and editorial process. Authors are encouraged to ensure their articles are of high quality and meet the journal's guidelines before submission to avoid any complications.
